M'KINNON CALLS BEGROW 'D-N LIAR'; NEW GOVERNOR WILL 'CLEAN HOUSE'

TEAMS CLASH HERE AT 2:30 FOR TROPHY

The stage is all set for the big annual series between Richmond and El Segundo, starting at 2:30 this afternoon at the First street ball park. The El Segundo club arrived in Richmond yesterday morning and immediately turned out at the First street grounds for a litle work-out. The boys from the south shape up as a formidable aggregation that may cause the local team a great deal of trouble.

Bill Tozier Here

Among the visitors is our old friend Bill Tozier, former Los Angeles Pacific Coast League Twirler, and who led the Boilershop team to a pennant in the local Twilight league several years ago. Bill still retains a lot of his old cunning and promises to bother the Richmond sluggers.

"Lefty" Bell, Chucker

"Lefty" Bell is another chucker whom the local fans have seen in action before, having worked in the El Segunda series here two years back Other pitchers ready to start for El Segundo are McMorran, Koltus, Bush and Herkins, Mowbrak and Duncan will do the receiving.

Visitors' Strong Line-Up

The remainder of the visiting club will line up as follows: Hala and Gipe, first base; Chegord and Stanley, second base; Carnes and Palmer, third base; Rodax, short stop; Wenert, Arnold, Delauey, Kramer, File and Daniels, outfielders.

The El Segundo team won the series last year but will have to be a vastly improved outfit to take the R. W. Hanna trophy back south again this season. Richmond not only possesses the greatest collection of stars in the state outside of the coast circuit, but the boys are playing together and are determined to even up last year's score.

Fans All Set

If a big advance sale of tickets is a good criterion, the First street park promises to be packed to capacity this afternoon. The gates will open at 1 o'clock and automobiles will be admitted to the limit of the parking section. The admission to each game will be fifty cents, while a season ticket good for the entire series will set back each fan $1.

All children accompanied by their parents will be admitted free of charge.

Garvin and His Gaff

Johnny Garvin, intense and enthusiastic rooter, fan, manager and coach, will be on the side lines at the cage, and "in the money" at the World's series' 'opening today at the First stret pasture between the El Segundo terrors and the Richmond invincibles.

Garvin passes out a line of panning that makes the opposing players grit their teeth and clinch their fists, but that Irish tenor voice of his keeps on teasing 'em till the last man bites the dust.

Dietrich in the Cage

In the little cage back of the big dish where the willow-wielders will stand today and try for batting honors, will sit Joe Dietrich with his little tablet of Spalding stationery. Joe has an eye like an American eagle, and his judgment is as true as Chief Justice Taft's.

There is one weakness or trait that Dietrich has: It breaks his heart to have to give a fielder an error, and yet he likes to give the batter a hit if there's a chance. What can a man do under those circumstances?

If you want to know, you'd better go out to the game today, and study Joe's system.

Governor Wires His Successor

"Nay, Nay, Pauline," Says Mr. Seavey

Several months afo a movement was started here to get Seavey into the race, but he declined to consider it.

Seavey said the new effort to get him out for the place was news to him. Seavey, formerly a member of the Board of Control, was an ardent suporter of Governor Stephens.

UNMERGER IS BAD FOR THIS TOWN: HEALY

Attorney Timothy Healy, of San Francisco, appearing before the Richmond Rotary Club yesterday in behalf of the General Committee against dismemberment of the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific railroad system, declared that Richmond could in no way profit by the proposed unmerger, but would suffer from complications which, he said, would follow.

Raise Rates, Claim

Healy contended that the disorganization incident to separation of the rail properties would not only tend to increase rates where double service was substituted for single service, but also the lines separately owned and managed, could not furnish as good service as is now rendered under single management.

Affect Through Service

"Through train service for Richmond would be lost through separate ownership," he said. "The unmerger would split up the suburban line, increase cost of operation and tend to increase rates and do away with all possibility of reduction in transbay rates, which reduction could have legitimately been allowed if there were no destructive transbay competition."

The attorney asserted that Richmond now has the benefit of the car distributing service of the entire Southern Pacific system; but if the Central Pacific were removed from the system the city would only have the benefit of cars on the Southern Pacific in time of shortage, resulting in great prejudice of industries.

Hershey A. Stiver, agent for the Southern Pacific, was chairman of the day, the program being in charge of Group 4.

At next week's meeting, the speaker will be Attorney Byington, of San Francisco, whose subject will be "California."

Pasadena Woman Goes to Assembly

Pasadena, Sept. 1.—Miss Eleanor Miller, of Pasadena, won the Republican and Prohibition nominations for State Assembly in the Sixty-seventh district in Tuesday's primaries. She ran 1000 votes ahead of W. F. Creller, her nearest competitor on the Republican ticket.

Miss Miller, who for fifteen years has been active in club and church circles of Pasadena, said:

"I stand, first of all, for law enforcement—especially of the laws upholding the eighteenth amendment."

'Phone Girls Fine Efforts Primary Night

During the tense period between 8 o'clock Tuesday evenig and the "pale gray dawn of the morning after," when weary candidates and frenzied friensd and partisans hung up the returns which heightened hopes or blasted ambitions, how many of you paused to consider "Central?"

As votes were flashed upon the canvasses recording the rise or fall of some friend's political fortunes, and applause or sigh greeted the figures, did you stop and consider that at the little switch board sat a tired but alert personality whose task it was to receive and transmit the intelligence over the wires?

The operators here in Richmond proved themselves, as usual, equal to the emergency, and their courteous and tireless efforts made it possible for the public to be apprised of the status of the numerous contests.

Manager George R. Calvert and his corps of assistants are entitled to the gratitude of the general public for the efficient and all-embracing manner in which they covered the primary.

The Record-Herald is happy to make this acknowledgment of its cordial appreciation of their good work.

EFFORT MADE TO FORGE VEALE'S NAME, IS CHARGE

Antioch, Sept. 1.—A stranger was arrested Tuesday by Constable Thomas and Marshal Sweeney and put in jail for trying to pass a check with Sheriff Veale's signature forged to it. The man, traveling under a number of aliases, was endeavoring to secure the fifty dollars it called for and had a cook, who until Monday was employed in a local restaurant, endorse it. This action brought the cook to the jail also, but he was soon released. Both men were under the influence of liquor and were held irresponsible.

Yesterday the Sheriff's office was notified, but owing to the fact that the man had been drinking and that he had not succeeded in pasing the check, it was decided that little could be gained by holding him. He was accordingly released and told to waste no time getting out of town.

All fraternal organizations, civic bodies, clubs and societies have been invited to send committees who will be privileged to voice their views, sentiments, ideas and ideals on the project.

The diversity and pertinency of the matters on the program, arousing general and intense interest would seem to insure a large attendance.

Keating Wins In Marin County

Sheriff J. J. Keating of Marin county, won out in Tuesday's primary by a narrow margin over two opponents. His majority was 180 votes. In the same county, for the assembly Charley Reindollar was several hundred votes ahead of his nearest competitor.

Reindollar is said to have profited by his experience in campaigning against Will R. Sharkey when Sharkey beat him for the senate.

Congressman Clarence Lea, one of the few Democrats that wins out in California in spite of his party affiliations, carried Marin county by a majority of 1388 votes over two opponents.

Dr. Samuel Burke Visits Masons Here

The visit of Dr. Samuel Burke, grand master of the grand lodge of Masons, of California, was a felilitous incident in the life of the Masonic fraternity in Richmond last night.

Dr. Burke addressed a large number of the members of the order at Lincoln auditorium. His address was confined to subjects that touch the fraternity, and his audience was made up of Master Masons only.

The speech of introduction was made by E. A. Martin, worshipful master of McKinley lodge.

Sebastopol—City awards $50,000 paving contract; work starts at once.

Short And Ugly Word Is Passed

El Cerrito last night passed a "Little Volstead Act."

This action followed a stirring talk by City Attorney Wilbur S. Pierce, in which he said, "It is time the trustees are taking action to rid the city of some of the spots which make it liable to the charge which I made Friday evening that 'El Cerrito is the rottenest town per square foot in the United States.' I mention specially 'The Poppy,' Aurora, Cinderella, Starkey's, The Turtle, Perrin's and the Chinese lottery joints."

Pierce Threw Down Gauntlet

Continuing, Pierce said the places enumerated had forfeited all right to operate under the laws of the land.

Pierce declared that it had been reported to him that there was a house being operated wherein ten girls were being used to lure the men and youths of the country.

Pierce suggested that a force of five or six competent, fearless men be chosen to conduct a rigid and consistent patrol and not to pursue a policy of sporadic and occasional raids.

The young attorney threw down the gauntlet dramatically and said "If there is any one in this hall this evening who wishes to carry this news to the proprietors of the places mentioned, they have my permission to do so!"

Begrow Makes Charges

Fred Begrow, a spectator at the meeting, informed the trustees that Perrin's place is operated at all hours of the night, and that such a regime of ribaldry and loud lawlessness is conducted there into the small hours as to make sleep out of the question for people living near by.

Looking at City Marshal McKinnon, Begrow said, "I was in Perrin's one night when a man now sitting at this table was present when liquor was passed over the bar, and did nothing to stop it."

"Damn Liar!" Says Marshal

"You are a damn liar!" exclaimed McKinnon, "You were so drunk I had to take you out of the place."

Trustee Kirk Gray said it was his opinion that El Cerrito should be rid of the places, whether it cost $500 or $1,000.

Mayor Lee concurred in this suggestion and said that the marshal should be given more assistance in the enforcement of the laws.

After this colorful session, the "Little Volstead Act" was put to a vote, and on roll call carried, all voting yes except Trustee McDermott, who voted in the negative.

And the board adjourned.

"More business and less politics. When I become governor I will throw out the political wrecking gang and put a construction crew on the job."*—Statement of Friend William Richardson, who has just been nominated by the Republicans for Governor of California.

THE PROPOSED AFRICAN EMPIRE

The wild imaginings and empurpled program of a few negro idealists call for a neuropatholigical, rather than a political investigation. The individual, black or white, intelligent or dull, who even suggests cutting a large section of the earth up into duchies and founding a new state upon the aristocratic class concept, may not be a dangerous lunatic, but he certainly is in no sense a person to be trusted with the lives and fortunes of others.

Africa is no undiscovered country. Its population is already mainly black, and there is no more reason why the destiny of the people should be placed in the hands of men of their own color from America or the Western Hemisphere than there is why they, because of respect for ancestors, should dictate the future of the cotton-field lands of the southern states.

The growth of democracy is the most notable political development of the last century; but it is not a democracy that Organizer Marcus Garvey purposes to establish in Africa. It is an empire. We must compliment him for one thing. He does not dream on a small scale. But he dreams, and he dreams a dream that never can come true.

GERMANS HAVE PLENTY BUT ARE NOT HAPPY

A returned tourist is quoted as saying that, while all Germans are generally employed, and that, while the wage scale rises and falls automatically with the rise and fall of the mark, the people are not well because they realize that their prosperity is ficial." A pathetic state of affairs, no doubt. e people have is steady employment, plenty to to drink, and wear, in which respect they from many of our own people, but they are py.

they could only get back the cherished mark mint par, employment and the ability to buy and raiment would not count.

When history comes to be written, the ease with ich an industrial Germany, working like bees in hive, hoodwinked the rest of the world into believing that she was economically paralyzed, will be one of the chapters that will need elucidation.

WORRYING ABOUT FLAPPERS

An Australian professor of psychology is quoted as saying the flapper is a pronounced expression of individualism. He further announces that this is due to improper training. Being a college professor, and, perhaps, absent-minded, it does not seem to him to occur that there is an incongruity in his conclusions. Surely he does not object to individualism, or if he does his opinions, in or out of the classroom, are of no value; and if he approve of individualism how can he say that an almost universal expression of it by the younger set is due to improper training.

The truth is this professor, like a great many others, has been hypnotized by a word. The older generation remembers when girls giggled and were often referred to as the "giggling age." Now they flap, we presume, and are referred to as "flappers."

The necessity of taking the flapper in hand and training her is not half as great as the necessity of taking a few fossils in hand and directing their attention to something more important than the psychology of adolescents.

ARTHUR GRIFFITH

It is an oft-quoted saying and probably a true one that the indispensable man does not exist, but sometimes our faith in the adage receives a wrench. Arthur Griffith was as nearly indispensable to the cause of Irish freedom as it were possible for a single individual to become. And it is peculiarly pathetic to note his passing at the very moment when his dreams of liberty were coming true.

Perhaps it is hardly fair to speak of Griffith's "dreams." Not without sentiment, an Irishman to his fingers tips, he was above all else a practical, constructive statesman, a diplomat, a builder who played the game.

With a majority of his country so numerous that the opposition seems almost neglible, Griffith accepted the Free State treaty, and, having accepted, backed the establishment of orderly government with every ounce of his energy and with all his commanding talents.

He died in harness, but not until he had virtually established a state that will shine in the annals of the future.

Maine now has a ghost. It's poor state that can't support at least one good hearty spook.

TELEVISION

Here are some of the things now easily transmitted by electricity over wires: Energy, word signals, sound of the voice. The last two named of course transmit human ideas and emotions.

Similar things are transmited by electrical force without wires.

Now it is proposed to take the rudimentary processes by which vision is carried over wires, and transport them to the realm of radio, so that sight as well as sound can be moved instantaneously to great distances.

In short, television is in the process of being developed as a result of the world's great progress in wireless. It is proposed to focus images on a screen made up of a multitude of tiny selenium cells, each of which is part of a minute electrical circuit. It is the property of selenium to conduct electrity with greater facility when in the light than when darkened. And thus, a contrast can be transformed from light and shade to electrical currents. And by a simple device, the greater and less currents of electricity flowing from the screen can be sent into the ether to be re-formed into lights and shadows on a similar screen at whatever distance the operator requires.

Thus, in time, one can sit in a hall in Richmond and watch on a screen the world series baseball game or the world championship boxing match!

Where is this going to end? Is it beyond the possibilities that some day material objects—man himself—may journey through space as a disembodied collection of electric vibrations, to be re-formed at the receiving station?

KNEES VULGAR

A news item informs us that Captain Thomas Myers of the Far Rockaway New York police precinct, "has made up his mind." The captain's mind is at present, it seems functioning on a single track. He has an obsession, as it were. This obsession is the dimpled knee, or perhaps, the knee would not have to be dimpled to excite his ire. The exposed or bare knee might disturb his peace just as easily. Therefore, he announces he will not permit ladies to "roll their own." "They must roll 'em up or I will lock 'em up," he is quoted as saying.

The order against bare knees is not universal, however. It is understood that men are exempt from stockings, though just why a man's kneecap is considered more decent than a woman's does not appear. Indeed, it is hard for the normal-minded person to understand why a knee should be regarded as vulgar, whether it belongs to a man or a woman—a youth or a flapper.

But orders are not always given with a view to common sense. Perhaps we never will have an explanation of the captain's viewpoint.

Reports from China indicate that General Chan plans to blockade Sun. Sounds like a weather bureau report.

France should collect every centime she can get out of Germany. Germany will have plenty left—but where is the famed French delicacy?

Uncle Sam, the personification of this great country is probably adopting the Britticism "Strike me pink!"

An organization similar to the Italian Fascisti may be introduced in Russia, according to a dispatch from Rome. That ought to make things in Russia about the last word in peace and quiet. And the sooner the whole country's a cemetery, the way things are going now, the better.

Breckenride Long, according to a news dispatch, still thinks he is the choice of Missouri democrats. Wouldn't you know former President Wilson backed a man like that?

The moral for young ladies who accompany gentlemen to the Bahama Islands, judged by a recent case, seems to be this: Don't go with a bootlegger—it may injure your reputation.

Concerning the story of "Prince de Bourbon," who turned out to be a wishwasher, who dares say that romance is dead?

Some of the lady war brides are almost as elusive as the "war brides" that came in the form of dividends.

King of Siam Takes His First Wife After Declining Father's Gift of Many

The King of Siam, at 42 years of age, has finally decided to marry and has announced his engagement to Princess Lakshma Lavan. His former neglect in this regard has been looked upon by the older Siamese generation as something of a scandal. His father had several hundred wives, and, when the young Prince returned from Oxford, where he studied, the King presented him with several dozen wives which were declined. The above picture recently arrived from Bankok, where the couple appeared in public for the first time.

S. F. Population Fixed at 607,095

With an increase of some 100,000 above the United States 1920 census figures, San Francisco's population is fixed at 607,095, according to the number of names in the 1922 Crocker-Langley city directory which has just been completed. The 1920 United States cencus gives that city a poplation of 506,676. The 1922 directory contains 242,838 names, excluding persons under 21 years of age. The total population is estimated by multiplying the number of names in the city directory by 2½.

PAPER REDUCES COST AND TIME IN TELEPHONING

Station-to-Station Method Adopted by Ohio Editor for Correspondents

Every newspaper editor knows that the telephone is one of the most valuable of the tools of modern journalism. Not only do reporters on city assignments use it almost exclusively in getting their news to the "desk," but it plays an important part in providing a contact between the paper and its out-of-town correspondents.

But not every editor realizes the importance of the savings in time and money which may be effected by a careful study of the classifications of telephone calls and the selection of the class of call best suited to any particular purpose.

The Springfield (Ohio) Daily News has made such a study and substantial economics have resulted, according to a recent article in the Editor and Publisher.

Reduction in telephone toll bills by approximately twenty-five per cent has resulted from the use of "station-to-station" calls by correspondents in telephoning stories.

Instead of having calls reversed by the correspondents, all stories are sent "paid." The correspondent simply calls the telephone number of the editorial department and when the connection is made, gives his story. Under the plan of making calls for the "state editor" and reversing the message, the "person-to-person" rate, which is considerably higher than the "station-to-station" rate, especially during the night, applied. To get the "station-to-station" rate it is necessary for the correspondents to send the messages prepaid, or charged to their own telephones at the sending end, and to ask for the telephone number only, or else "anyone at the Daily News editorial department."

Speed is secured because, under the "station-to-station" plan, the calling operator gets the receiver operator and asks for the number wanted. As soon as some one answers the telephone at the receiving end, the charge begins.

Under the "person-to-person" plan, the calling operator must first call "Long distance" and give the details of the call. The operator at the receiving point then gets in communication with the person wanted and finds out whether the call will be accepted. If so, then it is necessary to hook up the connection once more and take the time necessary to get the calling party back on the line, the receiving party meanwhile waiting.

Under the new plan, the Daily News correspondents are billed each month by their own telephone company. These bills are then transmitted to the News, audited, and paid. This plan also provides a check on calls and discloses any wrong usage of the toll privilege.

Girl Comes Home With Big Diamond

"Aren't you the limit, Jane? Come here, girls, and look at this child's diamond. She got herself engaged to a rich young rancher up near Oregon while on her vacation. Now, what do you think of that for luck?"

"Pretty slick work, I'll say. You must have worked fast, Elizabeth. What did you do? Grab him by the collar as you motored by his barn?"

"No, of course not I've known him all my life, I'll have you know. We've been writing for a long time, but when we met again we—well, we got engaged."

"Of course you did, and we are going to have a great big announcement party for you right away and tell all the girls. How about next Tuesday? Do you want to tell the world then?"

"You three girls know it now and I'll leave it to you to tell the world. But Tuesday's all right with me. I'll have to have a new dress, though, if I am the center of attraction."

"Oh, let me tell you about a place if you don't know. It's Cherry's at 515 Thirteenth street. They do have lovely things, and what I like about Cherry's is that they are so nice about allowing you to make terms. They let you have six months to pay for a garment if you like."

Cherry's store for men is at 528 Thirteenth street.—Advertisement.

"The Sheik's Wife" Last Times Tonight At the Macdonald

"The Sheik's Wife," which was shown at the Macdonald theater last night was filmed in Arabia by Henry-Roussell. Picturesque ruins and an ancient temple are among the locales used for scenes which are pictorially magnificent and which certainly are different from those glimpsed by American audiences. Added to this appeal of sheer beauty and quaintness is the deep appeal of a weird and passionate love story dramatic and at times primitive. It represents a gliting gem of art in a setting of convincing realism.

"The Sheik's Wife" rings true down to the tiniest detail. Most of the roles are assumed by natives. Some of these players ride almost priceless Arabian steeds. The correctness in the detail of Eastern life and custom will be a welcome change to an American public not used to it.

The highest artistry of France was injected into "The Sheik's Wife." Henry-Roussell, who has long been recognized as one of the greatest directors on the continent both for stage and screen and whose directorial star is in the ascendant, served for several years as an officer of the Algerian Spahis in Africa, and he was able to bolster his technical skill and dramatic art with complete familiarity with the habits and customs of the nomads of the desert. The difficult role of the Sheik Hadjid Ben Khedim is assumed by Marcel Vibert of the Comedie Francaise. The leading female role is played by a youthful actress whose art is mellowed beyond comparison with her youth. This is Emmy Lynn, whose bright blonde beauty is intensified on the screen by her close-ups with the swarthy and handsome Arab chief.

"The Sheik's Wife" will be shown for the last time tonight, with the usual Saturday matinee.

Other numbers on the bill are Al St. John, in a comedy called "A Studio Rube," and a Prizma.

Fiery, Itching Skin Is Quickly Soothed With This Sulphur

Mentho-Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe and heal skin that is covered with ugly rash or that is broken out with eczema; pimples, or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues fiery skin eruptions so quickly, says a noted skin specialist.

The moment this sulphur preparation is applied the itching stops and after two or three applications, the eczema is gone and the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho-Sulphur always heals eczema right up.

A small jar of Mentho-Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.

Dorothy Dalton Delights Crowds At T. & D. Theater

Bringing South Africa to Southern California!

That was the formidable task offered to the technical departament for George Melford's production of "The Woman Who Walked Alone," featuring Dorothy Dalton, which is showing at the Richmond T. & D. theater.

On the large tract of land which is known as the "Lasky Ranch," was built a street of a South African town. Though there are only a dozen houses, built of corrugated iron or plaster finish, after the native fashion, they have been so placed as to give an effect of great length, and are in such perspective relation to the adjacent foothills as to represent perfectly the Cape mountains of Africa. For "atmosphere," several big wagons with six or eight oxen to each, were procured. Fifty men and the same number of horses appeared as the South African Constabulary.

An unusual feature was the construction as one unit of the exterior and interior of the grocery store to which Mr. Sills, as Clement Gaunt, comes to buy provisions. It is customary to build the exteriors of such sets at some suitable place out-of-doors while the interiors were built and "dressed" inside the studio.

Besides Miss Dalton and Mr. Sills, the large cast of this feature includesh E. J. Radcliffe, Wanda Hawley, Mayme Kelso, Frederick Vroom, John Davidson, Charles Ogle, Mabel Van Buren, Harris Gordon, "Lefty" Flynn and Cecil Holland.

Is Money Ever "Spent" for Advertising?

A young and energetic executive took hold of a fine old retail business in New York.

"What this business needs," he told himself, "is a place in the mind of the public."

And deliberately he set out to sacrifice the greater volume of his profits and invest the sacrifice into the building of good-will.

He did. And to this old business, advertising was the breath of life.

For six months had not passed before the business had grown so that the advertising cost was a smaller percentage than ever it had been, and, becuse of a larger volume, the shop effected economies and gave far superior service.

That was five years ago. Today a certain percentage is spent, or supposed to be spent, for advertising. But as fast as the appropriation is spent, the more the business increases; and the more that the business increases, the smaller the percentage becomes.

Is money ever "spent" for advertising?

{Published by the Record-Herald in co-operation with The American Association of Advertising Agencies}

ing, unlucky, ill-omened hole in the ground. Fairchild resumed his loitering, but evening found him near the Silver Queen office.

Anita's note had told him little, yet had implied much. Something was fermenting in the seething brain of Squint Rodaine, and if the past counted for anything, it was something that concerned him.

An hour more, then Fairchild suddenly slunk into the shadows of a doorway. Squint had snapped out the light and was locking the door. Fifty feet, then Fairchild stepped from the doorway and took up the trail.

It was not a hard one to follow. Squint Rodaine passed the street leading to his house without even looking up. Two blocks more, and they reached the city limits.

A mile, and they were in the open country, crossing and recrossing the ice-dotted Clear creek. A furlong more, then Squint Rodaine turned up the lane which led to a great, shambling, old, white building that, in the rosy days of the mining game, had been a roadhouse, but which now, barely furnished in only a few of its rooms, inhabited by mountain rats and fluttering bats and general decay for the most part, formed the uncomfortable abode of Crazy Laura!

And Fairchild followed. It could mean only one thing when Rodaine sought the white-haired, mumbling old hag whom once he had called his wife. It could mean but one outcome, and that of disaster for some one. Mother Howard had said that Crazy Laura would kill for Squint. And now that Squint Rodaine was seeking her, Fairchild meant to follow, and to hear—if such a thing were within the range of human possibility—the evil drippings of his crooked lips.

He crossed to the side of the road where ran the inevitable gully and, taking advantage of the shelter, hurried forward, smiling grimly in the darkness at the memory of the fact that things were now reversed; that he was following Squint Rodaine as Rodaine once had followed him. Swiftly he moved, closer—closer; the scar-faced man went through the tumble-down gate and approached the house, not knowing that his pursuer was less than fifty yards away!

A minute of cautious waiting then, in which Fairchild did not move. Finally a light showed in an upstairs room of the house, and Fairchild, matching his own footprints in those made by Rodaine, crept to the porch. Swiftly, silently, protected by the pad of snow on the soles of his shoes, he made the doorway and softly tried the lock. It gave beneath his pressure, and he glided within the dark hallway, musty and dusty in its odor, forbidding, evil and dark. Now Fairchild could hear voices, and in a moment more they became louder, as a door opened.

"It don't make any difference! I ain't going to stand for it! Why didn't you wait until they were both there?"

"I—I thought they were, Roady!" The woman's voice was whining, pleading. "Ain't you going to kiss me?"

"No, I ain't going to kiss you. You went and made a mess of things."

"You kissed me the night our boy was born. Remember that, Roady? Don't you remember how you kissed me then?"

"That was a long time ago, and you were a different woman then. You'd do what I'd tell you."

"But I do now, Roady. Honest, I do. I'll do anything you tell me to—if you'll just be good to me. Why don't you hold me in your arms any more—?"

A scuffling sound came from above. Fairchild knew that she had made an effort to clasp him to her, and that he had thrust her away. The voices came closer.

"You know what you got us into, don't you? They made a strike there today—same value as in the Silver Queen. If it hadn't been for you—"

"But they get out someway—they always get out." The voice was high and weird now. "They're immortal. That's what they are—they're immortal. They have the gift—they can get out—"

"Bosh! Course they get out when you wait until after they're gone. Why, one of 'em was downtown at the assayer's, so I understand, when you went in there."

"But the other—he's immortal. He got out—"

"You're crazy!"

"Yes, crazy!" She suddenly shrieked at the word. "That's what they all call me—Crazy Laura. But I ain't—hear me—I ain't! I know—they're immortal, just like the others were immortal! I can't hold 'em when they've got the spirit that rises above—I've tried, ain't I—and I've only got one!"

"One?" Squint's voice became suddenly excited. "One—what one?"

"I'm not going to tell. But I know—I know!"

There was silence then for a moment, and Fairchild, huddled in the darkness below, felt the creeping, crawling chill of horror pass over him as he listened. Above were a rogue and a lunatic, discussing between them what, at times, seemed to concern him and his partner; more, it seemed to go back to other days, when other men had worked the Blue Poppy and met misfortunes.

Squint Rodaine was talking again.

"So you're not going to tell me about 'the one', eh? What have you got this door shut for?"

"No door's shut."

"It is—don't you think I can see? This door leading into the front room."

The sound of heavy shoes, followed by a lighter tread. Then a scream above which could be heard the jangling of a rusty lock and the bumping of a shoulder against wood. High and strident came Crazy Laura's voice:

"Stay out of there—I tell you, Roady! Stay out of there! It's something that mortals shouldn't see—it's something—stay out—stay out!"

"I won't—unlock this door!"

"I can't do it—the time hasn't come yet—I mustn't—"

"You won't—well, there's another way." A crash, the sudden, stumbling feet of a man, then the scratching of a match and an exclamation: "So this is your immortal, eh?"

Only a moaning answered, moaning intermingled with some vague form of a weird chant, the words of which Fairchild in the musty, dark hall below could not distinguish. At last came Squint's voice again, this time in softened tones:

"Laura—Laura, Honey."

"Yes, Squint."

"Why didn't you tell your sweetheart about this?"

"I mustn't—you've spoiled it now, Roady."

"No—Honey. I can show you the way. He's nearly gone. What were you going to do when he went—?"

"He'd have dissolved in air, Roady—I know. The spirits have told me."

"Perhaps so." The voice of the scar-faced, mean-visaged Squint Rodaine

"What Have You Got This Door Shut For?"

was still honeyed, still cajoling. "Perhaps so—but not at once. Isn't there a barrel of lime in the basement?"

"Yes."

"Come downstairs with me."

They started downward then, and Fairchild watched them pass, Rodaine in the lead, carrying a smoking lamp with its half-broken chimney careening on the base, Crazy Laura, mumbling her toothless gums, her hag-like hands extended before her, shuffling along in the rear. He heard them go far to the rear of the house, then descend more stairs. And he went flat to his stomach on the floor, with his ear against a tiny chink that he might hear the better. Squint still was talking in his loving tones.

"See, Honey," he was saying. "I've—I've broken the spell by going in upstairs. You should have told me. I didn't know—I just thought—well, I thought there was some one in there you liked, and I got jealous."

"Did you, Roady?" she cackled. "Did you?"

"Yes—I didn't know you had him there. And you were making him immortal?"

"I found him, Roady. His eyes were shut, and he was bleeding. It was at dusk, and nobody saw him when I carried him in here. Then I started giving him the herbs—"

"That you've gathered around at night?"

"Yes—where the dead sleep. I get the red berries most. That's the blood of the dead, come to life again."

The quaking, crazy voice from below caused Fairchild to shiver with a sudden cold that no warmth could eradicate. Still, however, he lay there listening, fearful that every move from below might bring a cessation of their conversation. But Rodaine talked on.

"Of course I know. But I've spoiled that now. There's another way, Laura. Get that spade. See, the dirt's soft here. Dig a hole about four feet deep and six or seven feet long. Then put half that lime from the barrel in there. Understand?"

"What for?"

"It's the only way now; we'll have to do that. It's the other way to immortality. You've given him the herbs?"

"Yes."

"Then this is the end. See? Now do that, won't you, Honey?"

"You'll kiss me, Roady?"

"There!" The faint sound of a kiss came from below. "And there's another one. And another!"

"Just like the night our boy was born. Don't you remember how you bent over and kissed me then and held me in your arms?"

"I'm holding you that way now, Honey—just the same way that I held you the night our boy was born. And I'll help you with this. You dig the hole and put half the lime in there—don't put it all. We'll need the rest to put on top of him. You'll have it done in about two hours. There's something else needed—some acid that I've got to get. It'll make it all the quicker. I'll be back, Honey. Kiss me."

Fairchild, seeking to still the horror-laden quiver of his body, heard the sound of a kiss and then the clatter of a man's heavy shoes on the stairs, accompanied by a slight clink from below. He knew that sound—the scraping of the steel of a spade against the earth as it was dragged into use. A moment more and Rodaine, mumbling to himself, passed the door. But the woman did not come upstairs. Fairchild knew why; her crazed mind was following the instructions of the man who knew how to lead the lunatic intellect into the channels he desired; she was digging, digging a grave for some one, a grave to be lined with quicklime!

Upstairs was some one who had been found by this woman in an unconscious state and evidently kept in that condition through the potations of the ugly poison-laden drugs she brewed—some one who now was doomed to die and to lie in a quicklime grave! Carefully Fairchild gained his feet; then, as silently as possible, he made for the rickety stairs, stopping now and again to listen for discovery from below. But it did not come; the insane woman was chanting louder than ever now. Fairchild went on.

He felt his way up the remaining stairs, a rat scampering before him; he sneaked along the wall, hands extended, groping for that broken door, finally to find it. Cautiously he peered within, striving in vain to pierce the darkness. At last, listening intently for the singing from below, he drew a match from his pocket and scratched it noiselessly on his trousers. Then, holding it high above his head, he looked toward the bed—and stared in horror!

A blood-encrusted face showed on the slipless pillow, while across the forehead was a jagged, red, untended wound. The mouth was open, the breathing was heavy and labored. The form was quite still, the eyes closed. And the face was that of Harry!

CHAPTER XVII.

So this explained, after a fashion, Harry's disappearance. This revealed why the search through the mountains had failed. This—

But Fairchild suddenly realized that now was not a time for conjecturing upon the past. The man on the bed was unconscious, incapable of helping himself. Far below, a white-haired woman, her toothless jaws uttering one weird chant after another, was digging for him a quicklime grave, in the insane belief that she was aiding in accomplishing some miracle of immortality. In time—and Fairchild did not know how long—an ill-visaged, scar-faced man would return to help her carry the inert frame of the unconscious man below and bury it. Nor could Fairchild tell from the conversation whether he even intended to perform the merciful act of killing the poor, broken being before he covered it with acids and quick-eating lime in a grave that soon would remove all vestige of human identity forever. Certainly now was not a time for thought; it was one for action!

And for caution. Instinct told Fairchild that for the present, at least, Rodaine must believe that Harry had escaped unaided. There were too many other things in which Robert felt sure Rodaine had played a part, too many other mysterious happenings which must be met and coped with, before the man of the blue-white scar could know that finally the underling was beginning to show fight, that at last the crushed had begun to rise. Fairchild bent and unlaced his shoes, taking off also the heavy woolen socks which protected his feet from the biting cold. Steeling himself to the ordeal which he must undergo, he tied the laces together and slung the footgear over a shoulder. Then he went to the bed.

As carefully as possible, he wrapped Harry in the blankets, seeking to protect him in every way against the cold. With a great effort, he lifted him, the sick man's frame huddled in his arms like some gigantic baby, and started out of the eerie, darkened house.

The stairs—the landing—the hall! Then a query from below:

"Is that you, Roady?"

The breath pulled sharp into Fairchild's lungs. He answered in the best imitation he could give of the voice of Squint Rodaine:

"Yes. Go on with your digging, Honey. I'll be there soon."

"And you'll kiss me?"

"Yes. Just like I kissed you the night our boy was born."

It was sufficient. The chanting began again, accompanied by the swish of the spade as it sank into the earth and the cludding roll of the clods as they were thrown to one side. Fairchild gained the door. A moment more and he staggered with his burden into the protecting darkness of the night.

The snow crept about his ankles, seeming to freeze them at every touch, but Fairchild did not desist. His original purpose must be carried out if Rodaine were not to know—the appearance that Harry had aroused himself sufficiently to wrap the blankets about him and wander off by himself. And this could be accomplished only by the pain and cold and torture of a barefoot trip.

Some way, by shifting the big frame of his unconscious partner now and then, Fairchild made the trip to the main road and veered toward the pumphouse of the Diamond J. mine, running as it often did without attendance while the engineer made a trip with the electric motor into the hill. Cautiously he peered through the windows. No one was there. Beyond lay warmth and comfort—and a telephone. Fairchild went within and placed Harry on the floor. Then he reached for the phone and called the hospital.

"Hello!" he announced in a husky, disguised voice. "This is Jeb Gresham of Georgeville. I've just found a man lying by the side of the Diamond J. pumphouse, unconscious, with a big cut in his head. I've brought him inside. You'll find him there; I've got to go on. Looks like he's liable to die unless you can send the ambulance for him."

"We'll make it a rush trip," came the answer, and Fairchild hung up the phone, to rub his half-frozen, aching feet a moment, then to reclothe them in the socks and shoes, watching the entrance of the Diamond J. tunnel as he did so. A long minute—then he left the pumphouse, made a few tracks in the snow around the entrance, and walked swiftly down the road. Fifteen minutes later, from a hiding place at the side of the Clear creek bridge, he saw the lights of the ambulance as it swerved to the pumphouse. Out came the stretcher. The attendants went in search of the injured man. When they came forth again, they bore the form of Harry Harkins, and the heart of Fairchild began to beat once more with something resembling regularity. His partner—at least such was his hope and his prayer—was on the way to aid and to recovery, while Squint Rodaine would know nothing other than that he had wandered away! Grateful, lighter in heart than he had been for days, Fairchild plodded along the road in the tracks of the ambulance, as it headed back for town.

The news already had spread by the time he reached there; news travels fast in a small mining camp. Fairchild went to the hospital, and to the side of the cot where Harry had been taken, to find the doctor there before him, already bandaging the wound on Harry's head and looking with concern now and then at the pupils of the unconscious man's eyes.

"Are you going to stay here with him?" the physician asked.

"Yes," Fairchild said, in spite of aching fatigue and heavy eyes. The doctor nodded.

"Good. I don't know whether he's going to pull through or not. Of course, I can't say—but it looks to me from his breathing and his heart action that he's not suffering as much from this wound as he is from some sort of poisoning.

"We've given him apomorphine and it should begin to take effect soon. We're using the batteries too. You say that you're going to be here? That's a help. They're shy a nurse on this floor tonight, and I'm having a pretty busy time of it. I'm very much afraid that poor old Judge Richmond's going to lay down his cross before morning."

"He's dying?" Fairchild said it with a clutching sensation at his throat. The physician nodded.

"There's hardly a chance for him."

The physician went, and Fairchild took his place beside the bed of the unconscious Harry, his mind divided between concern for his faithful partner and the girl who, some time in the night, must say good-by forever to the rather she loved.

Judge Richmond was dying. What would that mean? What effect would it have upon the engagement of Anita and the man Fairchild hoped that she detested? What—then he turned at the entrance of the interne with the batteries.

"If you're going to be here all night," said the white-coated individual, "it'll help me out a lot if you'll use these batteries for me. Put them on at their full force and apply them to his cheeks, his hands, his wrists and the soles of his feet alternately. From the way he acts, there's some sort of morphinic poisoning. We can't tell what it is—except that it acts like a narcotic. And about the only way we can pull him out is with these applications."

The interne turned over the batteries and went on about his work, while Fairchild, hoping with his heart that he had not placed an impediment in the way of Harry's recovery by not telling what he knew of Crazy Laura and her concoctions, began his task.

Midnight came and early morning. With dawn, the figure on the bed stirred slightly and groaned. Fairchild looked up, to see the doctor just entering.

"I think he's regaining consciousness."

"Good." The physician brought forth his hypodermic. "That means a bit of rest for me. A little shot in the arm, and he ought to be out of danger in a few hours."

Fairchild watched him as he boiled the needle over the little gas jet at the head of the cot, then dissolved a white pellet preparatory to sending a resuscitory fluid into Harry's arm.

"You've been to Judge Richmond's?" he asked at last.

"Yes." Then the doctor stepped close to the bed. "I've just closed his eyes—forever."

Ten minutes later, after another examination of Harry's pupils, he was gone, a weary, tired figure, stumbling home to his rest—rest that might be disturbed at any moment—the reward of the physician. As for Fairchild, he sat a long time in thought, striving to find some way to send consolation to the girl who was grieving now, struggling to figure a means of telling her that he cared, that he was sorry, and that his heart hurt too. But there was none.

Again a moan from the man on the bed, and at last a slight resistance to the sting of the batteries. An hour passed, two; gradually Harry came to himself, to stare about him in a wondering, vacant manner and then to fasten his eyes upon Fairchild. He seemed to be struggling for speech, for

Ladies! Look Young Darken Gray Hair

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe and nobody can tell. Brush it through hair.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray, and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two its natural color is restored, and it becomes thick, glossy and younger.

"Bullet Joe" Bush is not only the leading pitcher of both major leagues but in late batting averages his percentage was .373. This was when the New York Yankees' twirler had won 19 games and lost only 4. When his speedy delivery seems in danger of going wrong, Joe steps up to the plate and takes a Babe Ruth swing at the ball. Joe makes a specialty of driving in the winning run and twice this season he has knocked out homers.

If Back Hurts Use Salts for Kidneys

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatism twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleepless nights.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulates them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

"Bill" Jenkins and Crane Return From Fishing Expedition

W. B. Jenkins, sales manager for Frank Scholes, Richmond Nash dealer, and E. C. Crane, Macdonald avenue haberdasher, member of the firm of Smith & Crane, have just returned from an outing in Alpine county, where they enjoyed fishing for several days.

They caught the limit practically every day they were out, and enjoyed rainbow trout broiled, fried, barbecued and baked, three times a day.

The sheriff of Alpine county is a personal friend of "Bill" Jenkins, and when they reached rail-end on their way to the wilds, the sheriff supplied the fishermen with two good horses, and by this means they penetrated the remote reaches of Carson river, where the trout were rising avidly to the cast.
